

Guide to: Living your legacy.

Retirement is an opportunity to think about how you want to spend your time, share your experience and make a positive difference. Your legacy is something you build every day.

Think about what matters most.

Many people reflect on the people, values and activities that give their life meaning. This can be a good time to consider what you want to spend more of your time and energy on in the years ahead.

Sharing experiences.

Retirement can create opportunities to pass on knowledge, skills and life experience to others. Whether through mentoring, volunteering or simply sharing your story, your experiences can have a lasting impact.

Relationships.

Many people place greater value on spending time with family, friends and those who matter most. Investing in these relationships can strengthen your sense of belonging and create meaningful memories for years to come.

Giving back.

Some people choose to more fully support their church, community or favourite causes through time, skills or financial giving. Contributing in ways that reflect your values can create a lasting impact for others and bring a deeper sense of purpose.

Personal stories.

Family stories, photographs and life experiences often become meaningful gifts for future generations. Taking the time to record or share these memories can help preserve your family's history and the lessons you've learned along the way.

Planning ahead.

Some people review their will and consider the extent to which the people and causes they care most about are reflected in it. Planning ahead can provide clarity for your loved ones and help ensure your wishes are understood and respected.
